Third, Soriano, will be held by the Yankees from 2014-2015 before heading into free agency. The Cubs have a chance to trade for the two players, but they'd have to deal away one of their two catchers. How do you trade for two catchers? It's my opinion that there is a good chance the Cubs could make these trades. Ever since the Duffy signing, the Cubs have made it abundantly clear they are looking to trade for another strong starting pitcher to help strengthen the rotation. Although Soriano is rumored to be available, he may be more interested in returning to the Bronx and joining the Yankees. A deal can be made for both players, but it seems like Soriano would be the easier name to deal away. Cabrera, on the other hand, is a bit more difficult to obtain. The Cubs could trade Cabrera and backup catcher John Buck to obtain Soriano. This would open up a starting catcher spot, which the Cubs could use to protect Matt Garza and/or Geovany Soto. How would the Cubs change their roster to accommodate these two players? Barring a trade, Miguel Montero will likely become the Cubs' new starting catcher. However, Montero is a free agent after the 2014 season, so the Cubs

Class Actions The purpose of this post is to provide an overview of the various rights and benefits that attach to members and beneficiaries under the split-ratio plan as well as the dangers they face if Congress eventually passes a law to prevent retirees from reaping the rewards of their legal interpretation of the split-ratio employment terms. The basic concept behind the split-ratio was that the number of retirees is fewer than the number of active employees due to attrition. The company, however, could request an increase (split) of the number of active employees based upon extraordinary economic conditions. The purpose was to reduce the number of retirees, thereby reducing the individual retirement plan's (traditional IRA, Roth IRAs and Keoghs) contributions. Unfortunately, the company created a situation where, if the company were to request an increase in force (split ratio), but the demand for additional employees did not materialize, it could then fail to appropriately pay the eligible employees a higher percentage of their benefits (split ratio). This has led to the current adoption of the FAQ Article in the PIA Code. Under the Company's PIA Code, a company that request the increase in employe the number of active employees, up to the number of persons eligible for retiree benefits, can be said to be splitting the ratio. The above quote and the fact that it makes sense is probably on the minds of a lot of prospective retirees, so it is important to bear in mind at the outset. The Company has created a nice situation for those joining a company that had a prior experience with many retirees and retirees being given most or all of the benefits. Through the Company's disqualifying definition of the split-ratio, he would make this what it is. For most retirees and prospective retirees this means "he did have a retirement plan that pays a retirement amount to those who were employed for at least some amount of time." Now is the time for the Company to change this equation. However, before one is eligible to request a calculation of a benefit derived from the Company's defined benefit account amount should he or she know that the Company is not paying a benefit of this size or that the Company is violating the terms of the defined benefit account. Here are some examples. An employee receives FRA of $25,000 annually for the next several years. His employer requests the standard split. He, however, also has a deferred

About Developers: The Dragon Age team is a party of experienced games developers who were brought together for a special purpose: to create Dragon Age Origins, the best game of the Dragon Age franchise that would bring the best experience ever to the series. The entirety of the Dragon Age team is not only experienced, but very talented and passionate individuals. Those who created Bioware before (and even after) the Dragon Age series made them an excellent source for expertise, experience and designs. Testimonials from Previous Members: Patrick Mills, Lead Writer/Designer "Matt McElroy and I have a secret among our friends: we love Dragon Age: Origins. To be fair, the rest of the internet doesn't know that yet, though now more than ever with the launch of the much-anticipated Dragon Age: Inquisition. So when EA announced they were bringing Bioware back together for a new fantasy RPG, it caught our attention for a few reasons: Bioware had already made an RPG of their own, the original Baldur's Gate, and we were excited to have options. It's a bit hard to say why we love DA:O so much. Honestly, we've never loved a Bioware game so much, but maybe it's because it was our first ever Bioware game. We fell in love with the Divinity series, or maybe it was our first time around an RPG. When you've never played an RPG before, it's just a whole new genre of game to play, and DA:O let us dive right into it.
