"As the security challenges facing our customers increase, we continue to see more and more solutions become available. Gemalto said that consumers can expect more such tools this year from their existing wallet app partners like Square, Chase, and Fiserv, who are now actively working on adding these services to their offerings. "This announcement is an important step in our partnership with Square to offer significant new tools to our customers that will help them better manage their cash and personal financial information as they transition from traditional checkbooks to smartphone apps, said Jack Dorsey, Square's co-founder and CEO, in a statement. The research firm advises such wallet apps to integrate with other apps to help manage the uncoordinated process of managing money with different apps.
