A mobile communication system has been developed for mobile stations to provide voice and data communication. Global system for mobile communication (GSM) is a typical communication system for a mobile communication network, with which an integrated services digital network (ISDN) is used. A GSM/ISDN based communication system is called a CS communication system. Recently, a mobile communication system using a new technology has been proposed. GPRS (general packet radio service) is a mobile communication system using a technology called a high rate packet data service. FIG. 1 shows a communications system formed by such a GSM, GPRS and an external communication network. The system includes an individual mobile station 21 and a base station 22 which are communicating with each other. The individual mobile station 21 uses a GSM in an 800 MHz band, while the base station 22 uses a GSM in a 900 MHz band. Further, the mobile station 21 uses an ISDN in a B channel, while the base station 22 uses a radio remote access unit (RRU) 23 serving as an ISDN switch in the Lu interface. The RRU 23 switches the channels of the B channel to the channels of the B channel in the U interface through a direction indicator (DIR). FIG. 2 is an explanatory diagram of a channel frame. As shown, the channel frame includes a ranging channel frame, a control channel frame and a traffic channel frame. The control channel includes a plurality of control channels. Each one of the control channels includes at least one pair of a transmission control channel (TCH) and a control channel indicator (CCI). The TCH is a control signal which is transmitted from a base station to an individual mobile station. The CCI is a control signal which is transmitted from the individual mobile station to the base station. In the GSM, the TCH has a format shown in FIG. 3, where the CCI has a format shown in FIG. 4. FIGS. 3 and 4 are explanatory diagrams of the TCH and CCI formats. In FIG. 3, each block M(k) represents a burst, where M1(k) is a mobile station identifying
